

February 2020 Newsletter

Thank you all for your continued interest in my research. Things seem to be getting busier and busier and our minds are taken up with more and more aspects of daily living. Our capacity to think and do more seems to be increasing along with that though. This will be a year of change and it is becoming important to be really aware of how this is affecting you emotionally. Empathy is rising within us and that can have positive and negative results. If you find yourself having a negative emotion or even a stronger one than normal, you may have inadvertently picked up on someone else's feeling. The reverse is also true. You may find yourself feeling more positive than you would have expected. This is why, I think, there have been so many people divesting themselves of people who have been around them for decades. I know so many people who have recently been severing long standing friendships with people who are stuck with negative mind sets. Trying to help them and change them has just not worked. The 'awakening' are moving on and making new friends who are also 'awakening'. Whether you think this is right or wrong is not the point here now, I mention it because this is what is being observed and it might help explain some behaviour for you.

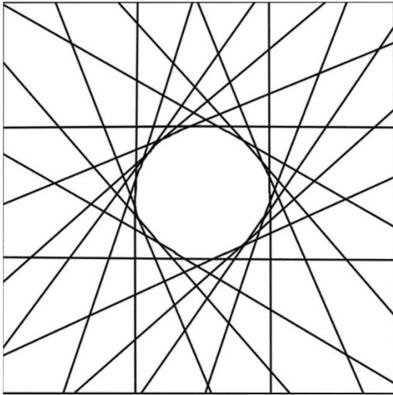

Earth Energy news

One of my recent findings has come from my mapping project to find the main energy lines in the USA and their intersections. This included mapping the major Meridians. Having nearly completed this work, I discovered that there were a specific number of these North South lines from coast to coast.

Being naturally curious, and being mindful of the same meridians I had mapped across the West of Europe, I wondered exactly how many were around the whole of the Earth.

I would like to briefly digress here in case anyone thought that all these meridians would meet up at one point in the North and South would be wrong. What you can see here is a model showing what does happen. (There are far more lines than shown here). The rough diameter of this hole is about 2 miles and they seem to be found around the point of rotation of the Earth at the true North and South poles.

The implications of all this are still to be understood but the hole in the middle almost certainly presents possibilities. One of these could be some kind of entry and exit point through to the other Worlds I mention in my social media posts and my books.

If I was now going to travel across the Atlantic by boat, I could tell how far I had sailed and how far there was still to go, by the number of the large meridians I had sailed across.

These lines are not precisely the same distance apart but they are roughly similarly spaced give or take half a degree of longitude. At the equator half a degree is about the distance of 35 miles. At 40 degrees latitude it is about 26 miles.

So now we come to the interesting part. When adding up the lines that had been found, there were 144 of these meridians going around the World. This can be divided up to give an average gap between them all of exactly 2.5 degrees of longitude (360 degrees divided by 144)

2.5 degrees distance at the equator is roughly 175 miles in distance. At the latitude of 40 degrees it is roughly the distance of 130 miles

There are of course many more smaller North South meridians but I find the number 144 interesting as it crops up in so many past writings.

I began my dowsing looking for water for farmers in Southern Africa in my early 20's. I started dowsing earth energy lines when I was 30 back in the UK and have been mapping energy lines in earnest since around 2004. It all began with questions - What is going on? What are these lines? All I could do back then was to make observations and make sure I was as accurate as I could be making them. Slowly some answers came along. I am still making observations as I still do not have enough the answers. It is all one can do.

If I have a problem at all with all this, it is that my curiosity gets the better of me and I just don't have the time or money to publicise what I find. Some of it eventually comes to print and I get the chance to talk about some of my work but the large part of my research work is still to be released. If you would like to help in anyway, please recommend to others to buy my books and do my dowsing courses. This really helps to buy me time.

Science

The surface of the world is a thin crust of rock sitting on top of molten liquid rock in the upper mantle. It is rather like the thin skin on top of a bowl of warm custard. This crust is thick where we have land and thin where we find oceans. The size of the Earth has changed over millions of years and it is not perfectly spherical. The crustal skin has moved over time and cracked to the extent that we find large tectonic plates sitting on top of the hot mantle. If the custard skin had been stretched and moved in the same way, it too would be cracked.

In some places one tectonic plate is forced into another one and the thinner crust ends up descending under the thicker one. This is called subduction and tremendous heat and pressure is created. The thinner ocean crust takes down with it all the sediment and mud from the sea floor and a big chemical mix begins depending on what type of rock is being merged with another.

It is within the zone where the mixing is going on that we find new rocks and minerals are made. Millions of years later, with the uplift of the land and the erosion of the rocks above, these new rocks eventually find themselves outcropping on the surface.

Mankind over the years has found a variety of uses for rocks. Buildings, tools, jewellery are just some of them. What looks good, what is hard, what is strong are all qualities that determine the usage. Sometimes a few of the more useful rocks were found to be not that common so trading began between communities. The demand would grow as new uses for certain rocks were found and when more people wanted them.

This now brings me to quite a rare type of rock that is only formed in a few types of subduction zones around the World. The conditions have to be just right though. The rock I am writing about here is called Nephrite and, even when it is formed, there is never that much of it which is why it is highly prized.

Nephrite comes in many forms. The chemical composition is almost the same but just a few minor differences will lead to a different variety. This is often seen by a different colour arising. In this case Nephrite too has several colours – black, white, grey, yellow & pale blue. There is one colour though that is more highly prized than others – Green. All these colours are all varieties of Jade, or Jadeite, which is a form of Nephrite.

This now takes me to a place called Hattusa in Turkey and the image you can now see.

If you have been following my social media posts you will have come across this block of Nephrite but not perhaps have realised how big it was now you can see people around it.

The question I raised, but did not answer in the posts, was why this large rock was here.

Nephrite is not a naturally occurring rock in this area. What I should also mention, for those of you who have not read my social media posts, was that the earliest remains found here were at the central temple complex. It is at this site that large 50 ton + megaliths can be seen along with clear evidence of a previous ancient civilization must have built the first construction at this location as only they seem to have had the capability to work with stones this size. This puts the original construction here beyond 12000 years ago.

This is now back to the very early Palaeolithic and long before the formation of the Black sea which we now know was caused by massive flooding of sea water coming through from the Mediterranean Sea.

I mention this because this now means that, back then, there was an easy land journey to Hattusa from the North in an area now called Ukraine. The Kirovohrad region there is where the first possible site is located for a source outcrop of nephrite. The second possible site is from the Şarköy region in Western Turkey – again hundreds of miles away.

We have to now ask why the inhabitants of Hattusa wanted this stone brought to them from so far away from either one of these two Nephrite sources. Why did they want this type of rock so much?

Archaeological research into Nephrite tools found in Turkey and Ukraine by Ruslan Kostov from the University of mining and geology in Sofia in Bulgaria showed that 29 nephrite tools were found in Turkey and these were a mixture of hammers, axes, jewellery and needles.

This on the face of it seems to imply that this boulder was simply one large piece of rock that they had traded something for which their stone smiths could have then worked on. They would have just cut pieces off to make the things they wanted.

The long distances the rock had to have been transported though seem to suggest that there had to be something special about these tools. With the nearby sacred spring called Yazilikaya, we have to wonder if these Nephrite tools were being made to be special in some way. It may be that special tools were needed to build special temples.

This is now the time to mention Pounamu. These are made from Greenstone which is another word for Jadeite and a word commonly used in New Zealand. The early Maoris also used them to make axes, hammers and jewellery because of the tiny crystal size and the stones hardness. However they also used them for sacred ceremonies. They considered them to have a deep spiritual significance.

Pieces of Jade have also been found associated with a particular sacred site in the USA and it seems that many hundreds of years ago the locals placed them on a major type 5 energy lines – the 6th and last Emperor Dragon that has now reappeared back on Earth. The location is on the coast of California to the South of Monterey. It was an old friend of mine David Alexander English that first refound this ancient sacred site and a piece of Jadeite. (www.davidalexanderenglish.com)

The above are two photos he took on the Winter solstice Dec 2019 which show where the node now is. The one with the Pacific Ocean in the background was taken along the same direction as the Emperor Dragon as it heads out across the water all the way to Australia. David's research has shown that the ancestors of the Hopi navigated along this Dragon when it was last on Earth with the help too of the other lines found across the Oceans (Meridians).

So these Ancient Navigators thought that Jadeite was important, the ancient New Zealanders thought Jadeite was important and also the early inhabitants of Hattusa in Turkey thought Jadeite was important. This has to mean that it was more than just a good rock for axes, hammers and needles.

So does Jadeite purify energy in some way? Does it offer protection from energy lines that have frequencies that are harmful to humans? Can it store energy? Or does it have another function we have yet to find out?

Social media news

The first thing I would like to mention here is my immense gratitude to a really lovely lady called Jill Jordan from Florida, US.

When I was over there running dowsing courses and holding some seminars, Jill very kindly offered to film me and she has now put up a video of my introduction to dowsing for beginners. It is 40 minutes long so if you can put up with my voice and images of me for that length of time, please do watch it and share it to anyone who you think might like to know more about dowsing and how it works (from my perspective anyway). The title of the video is Rory Duff intro to Dowsing and can be reached via this link:- <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=w3m4u2o9rnU&feature=youtu.be>

More about what Jill does can be found via her Sound Living facebook page where you will find in her other videos a particularly good aptitude in regards to playing Tibetan bowls

https://www.facebook.com/jilljordansoundliving/?eid=ARBbQ8rFITRQBY5ZkXvIrbUdGp6HnqiSLorvUcQa8rh3mfvGCa_CyvuytUJZV1iIS_t60iTdhiB37T&timeline_context_item_type=intro_card_work&timeline_context_item_source=554549633&fref=tag

This month's posts have focused around New Zealand and the evidence of some of the earliest people who lived there. The things that stood out were the following:-

There were several groups of people who had arrived there from different areas and they all got along peacefully for hundreds of years. They were called the Waitaha nation.

Secondly they were definitely intimately connected to the energies and energy work. What they left behind showed this.

Thirdly, some people seemed to want to suppress the evidence about the existence of these early folk.

I put forward several possible reasons why but did not state which one I believed to be the real reason. For me this was about the suppression of knowledge of one of the World's biggest secrets today. Universal knowledge and acceptance of this one thing is a 'game changer' in our World. What is really a shame is that this used to be commonly accepted over 3000 years ago.

Why it is being suppressed is unfortunately just down to power and money. The really wealthy people and the really powerful people do not seem to feel they have enough.

The secret is all to do with survival after death. This may not be new to you, but it is absolutely new to most people in the developed World around the planet today. The reason is that there has been no science that has supported how this can happen – until recently.

One of the reasons this is suppressed by the greedy psychopaths is that this knowledge end materialistic desires and this drastically changes spending habits and when that happens these people lose money – it really is as simple as that. Change of any sort is a threat to them.

More on this is coming in my next few posts and indeed I touch on 'Survival' in a new documentary I have been working on which I am now hoping will be finished and out at the beginning of March.

My next newsletter will say more about it but for now I can give you the title "Rosslyn chapel reveals its greatest secret"

Courses, Seminars, Workshops news

This last month I did a 2 hour talk to a very educated group of people. The subject was about the Psychologist Carl Gustav Jung and, in particular, the images in his red book. It was an interactive talk and we openly discussed, and used, our intuition to try and interpret the images.

I have studied these for some time now, having been drawn to because of all the synchronicity which I have touched upon in my last newsletters. What is still surprising though is how much working on these things within a group, helps to bring greater understanding. It is not just how others see things and what they intuit, it is how what is said. Words seem to spin off & set in motion the minds of others in cascades of inspiration and before long whole new concepts emerge that are both relevant and appropriate, not just for when Jung had the initial experience, but also for us today.

I have thought long and hard about what to do with the information that came out of this as well as the rest of my research on Jung's work. There is still more to come as the group has only worked through the first half of all the images. My next talk is in April when we tackle the rest of them.

Where this is all leading, seems to be quite extraordinary because up till now, what has emerged has not appeared in print anywhere else. Suffice to say that there is a large link to the Earth Energies and to the Grail.

Aside from this talk in April, all I have decided for the moment to just reveal parts of this information in my coming seminars. The Evolution of consciousness seminar and the Grail seminar will have the key points added to them.

These will also be included in one of the evening seminars that I will be holding in the hotel in Spain on the Grail tours over there. The dates for the second tour are now likely to be the 27th November to the 3rd December. Details for this will be up in the next few weeks.

Just a quick note to also say that I only have three places left on the first dowsing course in Bath on the 5th April. The next one will not be until May.

Book news

I have just finished reading the book Catalfalque by Peter Kingsley. It has taken a while with everything else going on. Thank here goes to Mark L. for introducing me to Kingsley's huge amount of research and also thanks to the two Jungian Analysts who I synchronously met on the banks of the River Frome last summer when reading Jung's Red book. The outcome of that conversation was that they recommended I read this book. On reflection though, I remember them also saying they had not read the book. Having now read it myself, I can understand why.

The reason is as follows:- It appears that Jung was incredibly upset and depressed at the end of his life in regards to where the Jungian Analysts had taken his initial work. He disagreed with what they were doing and they, in turn, did not like the way he had changed. They also did not like his new views on life that he had begun to talk about towards the end of his life which was based on having moved on throughout his life. In other words these Jungian Analysts, according to Jung, seemed to be stuck in the past and clinging on to what they had first been given. The vast majority of them had not moved on to explore what Jung's work really could have really meant for themselves individually – if they had practiced more themselves in the activities that Jung himself had gone through.

Strangely what seems to have upset them most, according to Kingsley (& I should state here that I also agree with him) was the concept that Jung was a Prophet. That he had the occasional glimpse of the future seemed to really upset their Worldview of how things should be and what could and could not happen in it.

In other words Jung's views did not fit or conform to someone's scientific worldview and it is here now that we come back round full circle to the now out dated views of the so called theoretical physicists and all other scientists who insist that when you are dead you are dead.

This is where a battle front is now being put up. This is being set up to look as though it is between those people that accept survival after death with the support of the new science and those that are reductionist who are supported by the relativistic science along with all its flaws and absurdities.

To think of it as a battle though would be wrong. On the one side it is already accepted that there is nothing gained by conflict. We are just going down a different path. If anything we are just ignoring the dead end path. The problem is that some people do not like to be ignored.

This is instead an inner journey we must all go through on our own but with the new addition of a specific type of group meditation. For those of you who have read a bit about Jung, here is a snippet of where I think we are now heading. For Jung it was all about understanding one's own Individuation.

This was often a lonely experience. His good friend, who was really the only person who came closer than anyone to understanding him, was Henri Corbin. Corbin brought Jung joy and happiness. This is the clue we have been left by Kingsley's wonderful book. The onward journey is now come from following the process of Individuation towards something completely new and not mentioned by Kingsley. This is something I am calling Group individuation and it can be achieved at sacred sites four times a year through group meditation with people who are on the path of individuation. What you find when you do this is that it can help bring though huge amounts of inner joy.

How we arrive at this, what it all means and how it works, will be covered in my future seminars.

Extra

A final thought here is really just a reminder of what I said 2020 was going to be about in my past newsletters. This will be a year of great changes. The financial markets, the outbreaks of disease in China, the disturbance and chaos being created in the Middle East, the 'uncovered by the mainstream media' rioting across France, Honk Kong, Chile and many other countries are all part of this transitioning. The globalist controlled media have been told to keep us in a state of fear. You will not cope if you allow this to happen – it is too tiring and draining. Yes we must accept the reality, yes we can do things about this individually, but most important of all is to switch from negative to positive as fast as possible.

Good luck with that and thanks again for reading this newsletter.

Please do let others know about my work if you think it is right and appropriate